- Although awareness of the Atchafalaya National Heritage Area is low, those that did visit the ANHA were satisfied with their visit as indicated by the high percentage who would recommend the area to others (98.2%).

Introduction

Representatives of the Louisiana Department of Culture, Recreation and Tourism (LOT) contacted the Hospitality Research Center at the University of New Orleans (HRC) for the purpose of executing and analyzing a survey of the Atchafalaya National Heritage Area (ANHA). The visitor profile is beneficial to assess awareness of the ANHA. This information will assist in knowing usage and satisfaction levels at various areas within the ANHA and may also be used in future advertising and marketing efforts.

Methodology

Representatives of LOT provided a questionnaire used in a national survey of heritage areas. The survey was sent to welcome centers in the Atchafalaya National Heritage Area, Atchafalaya Welcome Center, Vidalia Welcome Center, Capital Park Welcome Center and State Capitol Welcome Center. Each welcome center was instructed to randomly give out five surveys per day to visitors between May 22, 2009 and September 11, 2009. Welcome Center personnel were instructed to give out maps of the Atchafalaya area only after the survey was completed in order to get a baseline for measuring awareness. Completed surveys were periodically mailed via FedEx to the HRC.

A total of 367 completed surveys were received for analysis. UNO's Hospitality Research Center entered and cleaned the visitor data. The HRC executed statistical analysis of the data and tabulated the results. Open-ended questions were tabulated by hand. The HRC also analyzed the results and developed this summary report.
